Linda Marvin, President of Marvin Consulting Group for the past 20 years, is an international consultant and speaker with over 30 years of experience with large and small corporate entities in a variety of different industries. She has worked extensively in many cultural settings, both domestic and international, including Europe, Asia, South America and the Middle East. Linda brings a unique combination of consulting expertise with an intimate knowledge of organizations from a CEO's perspective. She integrates her unique insight and uses state-of-the-art research tools and processes to provide the most comprehensive consultancy available today.

Business Experience

Before joining Marvin Consulting, Linda was the President and CEO of Lockheed Martin Environmental Systems and Technology Company. She was instrumental in the strategic design and implementation of this high technology start up. The company was built from the ground up. And within three years, it grew from $30 to $250 million. Originally, Linda was hired by Lockheed to improve the productivity of the President and CEO of Lockheed Engineering and Sciences Company which held multiple NASA contracts, including the Johnson Space Center Engineering contract. During her tenure, she co-designed and implemented the company Leadership Program and individually coached executives and management teams. Her involvement at Lockheed has gained her extensive experience working with many other government agencies.

Linda's CEO experience has given her a depth of organizational understanding and insight, which better serves her consulting clients today.

At Marvin Consulting Group, Linda specializes in:

- Strategy Formulation and Implementation
- Merger/Acquisitions Integration
- Change Management
